I like having that there. It lets me know what I'm looking at in a succinct manner the report designer can't because it only shows actor.port (full workflow.composite.actor.port notation in tooltips is useful but not a replacement). With multiple copies of the same composite actor, it helps to have somewhere to look to see the full workflow.composite.actor.port notation for all elements of the report.

An alternative would be to have the report designer display the full workflow.composite.actor.port and to be able to look at the report designer and viewer simultaneously.
